matter, and people are trying to make sure that the particular ox that they like is not going to be gored. So they did as wise politicians do; that is, to collect enough people, by fair means or foul, hook or crook, to say they'll support a particular piece of legislation. All of that is a part of the dynamics of this Legislature and any other legislative body. But there also can be what may be called the loyal opposition. I'm not loyal to the Governor, I'm not loyal to the construction industry, I'm not loyal to the farmers. I am loyal to the people who need the kind of loyalty that I have, which will generate an inclination to support and speak for their best interests. Senator Brown has offered an amendment which she has indicated she will withdraw at this stage...

SENATOR SCHIMEK PRESIDING

SENATOR SCHIMEK: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...of the discussion. But her saying she will withdraw it does not prevent a discussion of it. And I think there should be more discussion of it, because the policy overall which determines where taxes are going to be cut is something that should not be just brushed aside because Senator Smith has a problem in his area with how a particular housing authority may be functioning. As far as the 33 votes, it's one thing to get 33 votes at this stage, which perhaps can easily be obtained, and 33 votes for the emergency clause because the Governor supports it. But that does not deter me from taking all the time that I can get on this bill and other bills to hinder the progress of this bill or the bills of those who have no inclination to show compassion and concern for the people I'm interested in.

SENATOR SCHIMEK: Time.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you, Madam President.

SENATOR SCHIMEK: You're welcome, Senator Chambers. Thank you, Senator Chambers and Senator Landis. Senator Chambers, you may continue.
